

Special Points Decoder

Bladder & Kidney Channels – Week 5

What each category MEANS, not just which point holds it

The Study Guide tells you WHICH point holds each special category. This document explains WHY that category matters clinically — the reasoning behind Jing-Well vs. He-Sea vs. Xi-Cleft, so you can reason your way to an answer even on an unfamiliar point.

12 Special-Point Categories — Quick Decode
Jing-Well	First (or last) point of the channel	Loss of consciousness, mania, resuscitation — the most 'reactive' point, used for acute/emergency presentations
Ying-Spring	2nd point of the Five-Transport sequence	Clears heat, changes in complexion/febrile disease
Shu-Stream	3rd point; = Yuan-Source on every Yin channel	Heaviness, joint pain; on Yin channels this IS the Yuan-Source point
Jing-River	4th point	Cough, dyspnea, chills and fever — respiratory/exterior presentations
He-Sea	5th point, at the elbow or knee	Counterflow Qi, diarrhea, digestive/organ-level disharmony
Yuan-Source	The channel's 'source' point for primary Qi	Best point to diagnose or tonify the pertaining organ directly
Luo-Connecting	Branches to the paired (interior-exterior) channel	Treats both channels at once; psycho-emotional presentations on Yin channels
Xi-Cleft	Where Qi and Blood pool deeply	ACUTE pain and crisis presentations of that channel/organ — not for chronic patterns
Front-Mu	On chest/abdomen; where organ Qi gathers	Diagnostic and treatment point for the associated zang-fu organ, often on a DIFFERENT channel
Back-Shu	On the Bladder channel, 1.5 cun lateral to spine	Transport point for the associated organ — this is why BL can treat every organ system
Confluent	Opens one of the Eight Extraordinary Vessels	8 points total across all 12 channels; each paired with a partner point
Command	One of 4 master points (abdomen/back/head-face/?)	Broad regional command over its zone regardless of specific channel pathology

The Bladder Meridian of Foot-Taiyang — Special Points Decoded

Category	Point	WHY this point, specifically
Jing-Well	BL67 Zhiyin	Corrects fetal malposition with moxa; labor induction
Ying-Spring	BL66 Zutonggu	See point-reference table in Study Guide for full indications.
Shu-Stream	BL65 Shugu	See point-reference table in Study Guide for full indications.
Jing-River	BL60 Kunlun	“Aspirin of acupuncture” — headache, pain anywhere on pathway
He-Sea	BL40 Weizhong	Low back pain, stiffness of the spine; clears summer-heat
Yuan-Source	BL64 Jinggu	See point-reference table in Study Guide for full indications.
Luo-Connecting	BL58 Feiyang	See point-reference table in Study Guide for full indications.
Xi-Cleft	BL63 Jinmen	See point-reference table in Study Guide for full indications.
Front-Mu (of Bladder)	CV3 Zhongji	See point-reference table in Study Guide for full indications.
Back-Shu (of Bladder)	BL28 Pangguangshu	Difficult urination, retention, enuresis
Command Point (back)	BL40 Weizhong	Low back pain, stiffness of the spine; clears summer-heat

Five-Transport Element Logic

BL is a Yang channel, so its Five-Transport sequence starts at Metal (Jing-Well) and cycles through the five elements toward its He-Sea point. Remember: Yin channels start at Wood; Yang channels start at Metal — this is why Yuan-Source always equals Shu-Stream on Yin channels but never on Yang channels (Yang channels have a SEPARATE, later Yuan-Source point).

Shu Point	Element	Pt	Clinical Use
Jing-Well	Metal	BL67 Zhiyin	Loss of consciousness, epilepsy, mania; last-point resuscitation
Ying-Spring	Water	BL66 Zutonggu	Headache, neck pain, epistaxis
Shu-Stream	Wood	BL65 Shugu	Headache, neck rigidity, mania
Jing-River	Fire	BL60 Kunlun	Headache/pain anywhere; difficult labor; “aspirin” point
He-Sea	Earth	BL40 Weizhong	Low back pain, command point for the back; clears summer-heat

The Kidney Meridian of Foot-Shaoyin — Special Points Decoded

Category	Point	WHY this point, specifically
Jing-Well	KI1 Yongquan	Resuscitation, calms spirit; used in hypertension
Ying-Spring	KI2 Rangu	See point-reference table in Study Guide for full indications.
Shu-Stream	KI3 Taixi	Key tonic point for Kidney Yin AND Yang
Jing-River	KI7 Fuli	Tonifies Kidney Yang; edema; night sweats (pairs with HT6)
He-Sea	KI10 Yingu	Difficult urination, impotence, medial knee pain
Yuan-Source	KI3 Taixi	Key tonic point for Kidney Yin AND Yang
Luo-Connecting	KI4 Dazhong	Heel pain, weak lower back, apathy/low mood
Xi-Cleft	KI5 Shuiquan	See point-reference table in Study Guide for full indications.
Front-Mu (of Kidney)	GB25 Jingmen	See point-reference table in Study Guide for full indications.
Back-Shu (of Kidney)	BL23 Shenshu	See point-reference table in Study Guide for full indications.
Confluent (opens Yinqiao Mai)	KI6 Zhaohai	Insomnia, sore throat, irregular menstruation

Five-Transport Element Logic

KI is a Yin channel, so its Five-Transport sequence starts at Wood (Jing-Well) and cycles through the five elements toward its He-Sea point. Remember: Yin channels start at Wood; Yang channels start at Metal — this is why Yuan-Source always equals Shu-Stream on Yin channels but never on Yang channels (Yang channels have a SEPARATE, later Yuan-Source point).

Shu Point	Element	Pt	Clinical Use
Jing-Well	Wood	KI1 Yongquan	Resuscitation, calms spirit, hypertension
Ying-Spring	Fire	KI2 Rangu	Sore throat, spontaneous sweating, diabetes-type thirst
Shu-Stream	Earth	KI3 Taixi	Yuan-source; master Kidney tonic, Yin AND Yang
Jing-River	Metal	KI7 Fuli	Tonifies Kidney Yang; edema; night sweats
He-Sea	Water	KI10 Yingu	Difficult urination, impotence, medial knee pain